1940: THAT WONDERFUL YEAR

(As summarized in the New York Times, Dec. 22, 1940)

The year of 1940 will not easily be forgotten in the growing history of professional football. This past season ever will be remembered for one reason, the 73-0 massacre of the Washington Redskins by the Chicago Bears, one of the greatest teams, amateur or professional, in the annals of the gridiron sport.

This score in the championship play-off gave the campaign a smash climax. Prior to that there had been nothing unusual about it. Crowds were larger throughout the National Football League than they had been in the past, but that was merely following a trend. In recent years the tendency ever has been upward, unofficial estimates for the 1940 campaign reaching 1,295,217, a new record. [Ed.: The final figure turned out to be 1,063,025, a drop of about 8,000 from 1939.]

As the season developed the Redskins were the standout troupe. With Slingin' Sammy Baugh pitching forwards with unprecedented efficiency, the Washington team won seven straight and seemed on the verge of a runaway in the East.

But the team had reached too early a peak. It started downhill in November with a loss to the ever-improving Brooklyn Dodgers, won from the Bears 7 to 3, and then was routed by the New York Giants 21 to 7. The race tightened up and it was only by staggering past the Philadelphia Eagles in the final, 13 to 6, that Washington reached the play-offs.

This was a mistake. In the west the Bears and Packers had run neck and neck, with Chicago always a step in front. And so it went right to the last engagement. Then came the play-off, with a capacity crowd of 36,034 in Griffith Stadium paying a record net gate of $102,280 to watch the slaughter.

The Monsters from the Midway were so wrought up over having lost to the Redskins four weeks before that they played with a fury rarely seen. This was a perfect football machine at its very best.

In fifty-six seconds the Bears scored. George McAfee rocketed through for 7 yards and Bill Osmanski swept 68 more for a touchdown. Washington was stunned but struck back. The Redskins reached the 26, had a touchdown pass dropped and never were in the ball game thereafter.

Sid Luckman, the old Blue from Columbia, engineered an 80- yard drive that was a quarterbacking masterpiece and he scored himself. It was his artful handling of plays that caused George Halas, the owner-coach of the Bears, to stamp him as the standout man on his team.

By the half-time intermission the Bears had a 28-0 lead and in less than a minute of the second half they had intercepted a pass for another seven points. Then came the deluge. It was a record score, not only in play-offs but in the history of the league.

Jock Sutherland of Pitt made his debut in the league. He coached the Dodgers, and they not only beat the Giants for the first time in ten years but also finished ahead of the New Yorkers for the first time in history.

The Giants, reorganizing their backfield, never hit stride until they toppled the Packers and Redskins in succession near the end of the campaign. But then they were beaten by the Dodgers -- paced by the peerless Ace Parker -- in the game that clinched second place in the East.

The season was also noteworthy for an attempt to revive the American Football League, a six-team circuit. The New York Yankees were the local club, operating in Yankee Stadium before very small crowds. Columbus won the title.

In the American Association the Jersey City Giants and the Wilmington Clippers met in the play-off. Jersey City won.

the play-off. Jerse	ey City won.
